In non-polarized cells, microtubules exist as a dynamic network whose assembly and disassembly are tightly controlled by a complex of microtubule-associated proteins known as the microtubule-organizing center (MTOC) that recruits microtubule-binding proteins, such as kinesins, to the MTOC where nucleation, growth and disassembly of microtubules take place. In cell division and cell migration, the network of microtubules is disassembled by cytoplasmic microtubule-disassembling agents such as colchicines, lysosomotropic alkaloids and MCAK/KIF2A (also known as KIF2Bα or KIFC1)[@b4][@b5]. During mitosis, the microtubule network is disassembled at the cleavage furrow and the spindle midzone by a kinesin related to MCAK[@b6]. In addition, microtubule-disassembling agents, such as taxol, have been used to treat various types of tumors[@b7]. Conversely, certain microtubule-stabilizing drugs, such as colchicine, are used to treat inflammatory diseases and other medical conditions[@b8]. Therefore, the MTOC and microtubule-disassembling activities of MCAK/KIF2A could be utilized for therapeutic development in several human diseases. MCAK/KIF2A belongs to the e79caf774b
